Joseph Jojo my buddy. We met when I was around 15 and I think you were 17. We spent so much time together people thought we were dating. But we really found comfort in each other being young trying to figure life out and how to get this money. You were a real one. The only one we opened our doors to. And it was all good because we talked about elevating, getting money, and supporting our kids. It hurt my heart to learn that we wouldn't have another one of those conversations again. But you were the best dad you could be in every capacity in your body. I'll miss your smile, laugh, and that slurred lingo. But best believe your kids will carry your legacy from the streets to college and corporate boards. I love you friend. May God bless and accept your sweet soul. I'll never forget you.
