I really don't know where to start. So let's just go back about 30 or so years to the night that I was first introduced to you. I liked you from the start. But little did I know that as I got to know you over the years that I would just love you. You accepted me as part of your family without hesitation. And even when I messed up, was jacked up or tore up from the floor up. You never wavered about the decision. Thank you. I watched you over the years raise your family, and I know the struggle was real. Just like these tears I'm fighting back now, as I attempt to put my feelings in words. I remember our last conversation when you, R.J. & I talked. Even then you said Alex you're family don't be no stranger. I realized then that after all these years, you were still the same cool person I had met years ago. Thank You for so many memories. I will always Love You. Now may you RIP and be free from pain & suffering.
